BILL WAS NOT DEAD.

HE DISPROVES JUMPIN' JOE'S REMARK TO THAT EFFECT.

And Jumpin' Joe Thereupon Turns the Subject to George Washington, Who Invented the Famous Pie of That Name. A Few More Shining Examples.

Hevin closed my exhibishun at Harmony Corners the other evenin in peace and good will, and the large and cultivated audience seemin to want fur sunthin more before departin fur thar v'ar chewsos homes. I secured my animals and inebriated and repititiously accident and proceeded to say: "It ar' my painful duty to announce the death of Shakespeare to the assembled multitude afore me. He had a front name, the same as most of us present, and it was William. As to whether he fell out of a tree, was drowned in a creek or was run over by a herd of steers I can't say, but the fact of his death is sartin. I got it in such a way that thar can't be no mistake about it. Another good man has been removed from our midst. Agin we ar' called upon to realize that in the midst of life we ar' in death. While I hadn't the pleasure of his personal acquaintance, nor kin I rightly remember jist whar his claim was located, his reputashun fur trooth, honor and integrity was no stranger to me. Thar was a critter, as high as I kin figger out, whose mishun was the same as my own—the happiness of his fellow men afore and above all else. He had a heart. He was marvellous, sympathetic and full of pity fur the misfortunes of others. He had no grand aggregashun of reptile intelligence, no panoramy nor family remedies, but he went about the kentry seekin to do good and accomplish much. I fear a critter come to him."

At this p'int an ole kuss r'iz up from a back seat and wiped his weepin eyes on a red wooden rag which had him tied around his sore throat. He said he hadn't intended to gin his self away, bein a stranger to the town, but as I had spoken so feelingly of him he desired to correct the mistake I labored under. He was William Shakespeare, and so fur from bein cut off in his prime he hadn't even had a touch of the colic fur three months past. His line was bringin mews and whisky from Arkansas into Cherokee and disposin of 'em at jist profit unto to kiver expenses, and the critter who said that he hadn't a marvellous and sympathetic heart, the same as I had declared, was a liar and a boss thief. He wasn't dead, and he didn't mean to die, but his object was to keep right on doin good and makin his fellow men happy.

I announced an intermission of five minutes, durin which the hall crowd embraced Shakespeare and wept in unison with him, and then I proceeded:

"Afore this exhibishun opened I war axin by an eminent citizen of your enterprisin town to take advantage of the occasion to wring in a few words in favor of George Washington. Desirin to be on the safe side, I won't positively announce that he ar' dead, though I'm willin to bet $10 even up that he ar'. Leavin that out of the question, I'm free to say that if we had a hundred men like him in this yere Cherokee strip thar would be such a boom that we couldn't hold the crowd."

"Besides bein a patriot from Sunday mornin to Saturday night, he was ever on the side of the pore and oppressed and ever seekin to do good. No weddin widdler or fatherless child applied to him and went away unaccompanied. No tenderfoot axed him fur a dollar that he didn't git. Besides doin his reg'lar farm work he fit the British, run the kentry and invented the Washington pie, a pie which is known in every city in the land from Maine to California. It wasn't in him to compound a sassy-parrily or gather together a grand aggregashun like you hev witnessed yere this evenin. His line was different, same as your lines ar'. Melbe he'd hev got along in this Cherokee kentry and mabe not. It might hev bin in him to handle six horses and a stagecoach; but, if so, we hev never heard of it. However, taken all in all, nobody should be stingy about singin his praises. Fur a man who never sot a la'trap, lived in a sord shanty or owned to bein the father of 'leven children he did powerfully well, and if the audience ar' agreeable we'll gin him three cheers."

It was a Washingtonian multitude. It r'iz up as one man and yelled fur the Father of His Kentry. After the yellin had subsided it was noticed that a dilapidated ole critter who had exhibited much emotion durin my remarks was still on his shun durin my remarks with a patriotic heart. I invited him to add to my remarks if he felt inclined, and somewhat to our astonishment he announced himself as Thomas Washington, the only survivin brother of George. He had rid in a distance of 'leven miles on a blind horse to attend my exhibishun and had no idea that his brother George would be referred to in any manner.

My feelin remarks had teched his heart. He didn't want any pertickler praise fur bein the only survivin brother of the man who gin this nashun its fust boom, but he did want to express his gratitud to the people of Harmony Corners fur their loyalty and patriotism. He wasn't workin in the same line as George, but had cum out from Illinois to interduce a washin mashoon which would save America $10,000,000 worth of soap every y'ar. The mashun of one was to save the kentry and the other to save the soap, though it amounted to the same thing in the end. He wasn't sartin about George's death either, but not hev'n heard from him fur several y'ars he was inclined to think he might hev gone under in the conflict. All that I had said in praise of the great man was true, and a heap more could be related without stretchin the trooth. After the close of the performance his washin mashoon could be seen at the hotel, and he would at the same time hold hisself cheerfully willin to gin sich informashun about the Washington fam'ly as he had on hand. When I had called fur three more cheers fur the brother of George and they had bin given, I made a few ramblin remarks about sich bangup chaps as Nero, Kit Carson, Diogenese and Davy Crockett, techin altogether on thar v'ar chewsos and holdin 'em up as shinin examples of what a man could becom if he tighten his suspenders, grease his heels and made a try fur it. The applause was as enthusiastic as I could wish fur, and when the meetin finally broke up the multitude declared that the moral examples held up afore them would be of everlastin benefit to Cherokee at large and Harmony Corners in pertickler.

AUSTIN KEEKE.

Just One of Them.
Scene—Street car. Enters Mrs. Gadd, with bundles and bright smile as she recognized a friend seated next the door.

"Why, Mrs. Smith, how do you do? So very glad to see you. Isn't it terrible walking? I declare, I'm just covered with mud. Do you mind holding these bundles while I get my pocketbook? Thank you so much."
